Phall in Philadelphia

Remember last September? You know, when we grumbled that summer was slipping away? Or, how we reluctantly swapped our beach bags for backpacks? And dreaded that our lazy summer mornings would surrender to the back-to-school hustle?

If only...

In a world where nothing can be taken for granted, there IS something reassuring about the change of seasons. The world keeps turning and nothing expresses that more than the beauty of fresh produce. As summer fades away, the approaching Autumn will console us with an exquisite array of fruit and vegetables.

The merchants of the Philadelphia Wholesale Produce Market welcome back fall favorites including apples, beets, broccoli, brussels sprouts, cauliflower, cranberries, parsnips, pumpkins, and fall and winter squashes. And keep in mind that while we have a special reverence for local and seasonal produce, we import from all around the world. The demand for fresh strawberries, avocados, and bananas never dwindles, so our merchants find efficient ways to bring “glocal” (global and local) to the Philadelphia region twelve months a year.

Visit us at pwpm.net or, better yet, feast your senses in our fully-enclosed and fully-refrigerated facility at 6700 Essington Avenue. Take comfort in the fact that our wholesale businesses have weathered tough times and endured for generations because “fresh is our life’s work.”

Fuel Up Remote Learning

We feel your pain. Many families are facing the reality that on-line learning is in the cards for the near future. Not only are there hours of juggling work schedules and remote instruction, but parents have to plan out, shop for, and prepare meals that were once the purview of the school cafeteria.

To arm the next generation with healthy choices and to keep our at-home students motivated and focused, try visiting Produce for Kids, which gives great tips for brainfood, healthy lunches and the nonstop snack requests!

Whether you’re a retailer or a parent, the experts at the Philadelphia Wholesale Produce Market are here to supply you with everything you need to face this challenging new school year.
