August Abundance

August is known for its legendary local produce. There's nothing like sinking your teeth in a fresh corn on the cob or a juicy peach. Now is the perfect time to savor all the gifts of nature that are grown right in our own backyard.

In these dog days, get your hydration from Mother Nature. Cool off with locally-grown blueberries, broccoli, cabbage, cantaloupes, corn on the cob, cucumbers, nectarines, okra, peaches, pears, peppers, squash, tomatoes, watermelon, zucchini and so much more.

When you eat local produce, you support a nearby grower, and you reap the benefits of freshness, nutrition, safety, and taste. You also boost the livelihood of local farmers and help to ensure that we preserve lush farmland and greenspace in our community.

Our merchants love to offer local before the inevitable pull of the seasons draws summer to a close. But, rest assured that we also source the best produce the world has to offer 24/7.

A Frequently Asked Question: Are You Open to the Public?

Yes! There is no membership fee or business license requirement. The Philadelphia Wholesale Produce Market is open to the public.

Unlike many terminal markets around the country, the PWPM was designed to serve many populations. We welcome a variety of customers ranging from large supermarket chains to home chefs. We also proudly embrace neighborhood coop groups who buy in bulk in order to cut costs and increase access to fresh, healthy produce. While we are primarily a business to business operation, the merchants of the Philadelphia Wholesale Produce Market are gratified to share the benefits of wholesale with the people of our region.

Just keep in mind:

- Produce is purchased in bulk - by the case or carton.
- Bring a jacket – the Market is kept at about 50 degrees.
- Wear your walking shoes - the concourse is ¼ mile long.
- It's a good idea to bring a hand truck if you plan on buying more than one case.
- Cash is king, although some of our 18 merchants accept credit cards.
- Stay within the yellow barriers for your safety.
- The Market is wheel chair accessible.
- Visit pwpm.net for our hours and entry fees.
